AEROPLANE SOARED 1500 FEET. Wonderful Flight Made by Paulthans—French are Jealous.

Paris, Nov. 21.—The London Daily Mail was the first European newspaper which had a representative flight on Saturday. His ground height was carefully estimated at 1500 feet for about 1500 feet. The French newspapers, however, give him credit for only 500 metres, or about 1500 feet. Blind this with discrepancy there is a story of a woman's jealousy on the part of an aviator, who is said to have given the account of the flight to the Paris papers, with whom he is a favorite. There is no official report of the flight.

COOK'S REPORT FORWARDED

Sent Under Key and Guard to University Authorities at Ottawa gov.

New York, Nov. 21.—Under a strong demand, the voluminous report prepared by Dr. Frederick A. Cook, of the University of Copenhagen, and sent forth in a shell the explorers claim to have reached the North Pole, will be taken aboard the Scandinavian liner, United States on Thanksgiving.

Dr. Cook is taking no chances of his report's misreporting in any way. He has arranged for it to be placed under lock and key in the strong box of the liner, where, in the Captain's possession, it will remain until a committee from the University of Copenhagen, who will be on the ship, will be permitted to see that they are treated with the documents. The voluminous report has just been completed and it was just learned today that it consists of 100,000 words.

In a general synopsis of the explorer's data contained in his note book will be the entire report. Each point which Dr. Cook has emphasized during his journey in this country has been taken up separately. These are the documents upon some more important details in his original notebooks.

TO BROADEN POWERS OF RURAL COUNCILS

It has been given to be understood for some time that the Local Improvement Act will be overhauled at the coming session of the Legislature, for the purpose of broadening the powers of the local improvement councils and thus placing the management of strictly local affairs more fully in the hands of the people of the community affected.

The change may be regarded as a step in the evolution of the rural municipality, a form of rural organization common to other countries but as yet unknown in Alberta. The nearest approach we have had to it yet has been the local improvement district, but the powers conferred on the councils of the local improvement districts have been narrower than those generally accorded by the government to the councils of rural municipalities. The purpose of the amendment is to extend the powers so far in the direction of a municipal council's powers as the circumstances call for.

The proposed change is significant of the change in the conditions of the country. The present act has worked fairly well, though complaints have been made in many quarters and on many grounds. It must be assumed, however, that the advancement of settlement and the progress of development in a country of so vast an area, as well as the increasing needs of the provinces as Alberta will reveal needs and disabilities in arrangements designed to accommodate all parts of the Province and to serve the purposes of an earlier day. Old forms must be found inapplicable here and there, and when as found must be replaced by some kind more in keeping with the conditions and needs of the time and place.

It is desirable, however, that rural organization should keep pace with the changing conditions. It is not too far necessary that it does not too far out run the conditions of the time and thus become a coercive force. It is necessary, too, in making changes to see that the changes made remedy the grievances complained of but do not in themselves give rise to other grievances. It is understood in this connection that the acceptance of the new act will be a matter of choice to each local improvement district, that those which wish to come under its provisions and exercise the larger powers conferred by it may do so, but that those which wish to remain under the provisions of the old act will be free to remain as they are.

The principle for such legislation is to engage the common sense of the people should be allowed to manage their own affairs. This is the foundation of government of all kind in this country. The local improvement system is intended. The aim of the new measure as indicated in the address of Mr. McLeod to the convention of local improvement councils in Strathcona is to put into the hands of each district desiring it a more full control of the matters which solely affect that district. What these matters are, and how far the extension will go, remains to be decided out in the Legislature when the measure comes. The resolutions passed by the convention will no doubt be duly considered in outlining these details. Whatever the details may be, however, the principle of the proposal is thoroughly sound.

Premier Rutherford dropped an excellent hint at the convention in allusion to the municipal system which has been created or allowed to grow up in the Province of Ontario. Such system he very well said, did not need to be established in Alberta. In general that system creates two municipal governing bodies, the township council and the county council. It is unnecessary to those familiar with it, working to outline the disadvantages of this duplication of machinery. There is no clear reason for the existence in Alberta of secondary authorities corresponding to the county councils. And in the absence of such reason there could only be a nuisance and expense. From the Premier's remark it is gathered that the idea is not to proceed at all in the direction of increasing the number of governing bodies, but simply to broaden the powers of the existing authorities. The district council or municipal council should be able to handle all the business of local government efficiently if given powers in keeping with the advancement of the country and the problems which come in the front. Alberta will have to be a far different Province before there is any apparent need of imposing a second governing body upon the council of the local improvement district or the municipality and the Provincial Legislature.
